"Dure a'vean tedd ard'dhu, aegefe tha mar vaer'trouv a dòchase caente. T'deie, ataenverden, als ell'ea esseath que'ess dòchas esseath."

The Aen Ataenverden (The Reclaimers, direct translation "People of (who will) Reconquer") are envisioned Aen Seidhe that will, one day, reclaim the lands stolen by humanity and restore what was once lost.

About

As the humans began to conquer large parts of the Continent the majority of the elves began to practice a 'salted earth' tactic; inscriptions in holy sites, texts, artifacts and many treasures were destroyed or given to the flame rather than having them fall into the hands of the invaders. A small group of the Aen Saevherne, however, believed that the loss of their cities and lands was merely a temporary setback, that humanity would not be able to suppress the Aen Seidhe forever, or would burn itself out in less than a few millenia.

These few farseeing Aen Saevherne labeled their idea of a reconquering elven force as the Aen Ataenverden, the reclaimers, who would have to bear the burden of restoring what was once lost.

In order to support the endeavours of these reclaimers, treasure caches were constructed in certain important key positions around the Continent. They were magically sealed, given guardians or hidden in places they believed no human would ever willingly tread. Many of these caches were sealed via riddles, riddles that only proper Aen Seidhe would be able to solve.
